The dues for 1916 were fixed at four dollars.

A statement^{was} made on behalf of the publishers of the American Journal of Tropical Diseases and Preventive Medicine setting forth the financial condition of the Journal. Two years ago a proposition to amend the charter was received by striking out the section, which requires the Secretary's office to be located in Philadelphia. The Assistant Secretary, Dr. Allen J. Smith, was appointed a committee of one to report upon the necessary steps to be taken to have the charter amended. Dr. Smith's report stated that as the charter was incorporated under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania it would be necessary to have a Secretary in Philadelphia; an assistant secretary would answer the requirements of the law. This assistant secretary should have at least a copy of the minutes of the Society. In view of this report the Council voted not to proceed with the proposed amendment.

The United States covers an area of the earth's surface which presents nearly all varieties of climate. In a great part of the country the climate is that known to the students of the subject as subtropical. It was not, however, until our people became intimately associated with territory located between the tropics that the significance of this fact was appreciated by any except a few. Within five years after the Spanish American War, a group of far sighted physicians in Philadelphia organized the Society which now meets at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition as The American Society of Tropical Medicine. The Society was organized for the purpose of advancing the knowledge of tropical diseases by encouraging original research by its members and others; collecting and recording facts ascertained by such researches; and disseminating information thereof by discussion among its members and by the publication of papers read before the Society.

In 1910, our President, Dr. Edward R. Stitt, emphasized the fact that the training which a man receives in the study of the so-called tropical diseases is of just as much value to him if he practices his profession in the upper austral zone, the lower austral zone or the tropics. This year again our President, Dr. Charles F. Craig, whose absence we deeply regret, points out in his address, that any part of the United States may be the field for the development of a tropical disease and that many so-called tropical diseases are frequently to be found in northern latitudes. He also advises that medical men in the United States familiarize themselves with the characteristics of these diseases so that they may recognize them once they appear. Both San Francisco and New Orleans know the necessity of this from their recent experience with bubonic plague.

This Exposition has been planned to commemorate the connection of the Atlantic Ocean with the Pacific Ocean across the isthmus of Panama. We must not forget that the French would have constructed this canal had it not been for mosquitoes, malaria, and yellow fever. The low forms of life which are responsible for the development of these diseases in the human body and their transmission from man to man are indifferent to race, creed, or social position.

It is solely because the sanitary department of the canal commission has made it possible for non-immune men to work without the danger of acquiring infections of this type that the task has

Dr. Isadore Dyer presented a statement of the financial condition of the American Journal of Tropical Diseases and Preventive Medicine in which it was shown that the journal had been financially a losing property. He presented four propositions for its future and the future of the transactions of the Society:

2^d Reorganize as a stock company with the members as stockholders paying for their stock in annual installments.

3^d That the Society take over the Journal as its property without cost and agree to continue its publication.

4th That the transactions of the Society be published as a department of the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal, maintaining the name American Journal of Tropical Diseases and Preventive Medicine, the official organ of the American
